

THE WILD FRONTIER

Harvest Festivals were a way for giving thanks to nature for giving you food to eat.

The community gathered and stored food together. Fishing was one way they did this.

People used backwoods skills to survive in the wilderness by finding food and hunting animals.

The land was covered in forests without roads. People used canoes on rivers to get around fast.

The Elders in a native tribe were often the chiefs and medicine men. They healed people and led them on Spirit Quests through meditation.

Totem poles told stories about animals where the animals had special meanings. People used these stories and carvings to guide them.
